

He has a degree in chemistry from the University of Rome La Sapienza and currently completing his second year of a Phd at the department of chemical engineering, materials, and environment of the University of Rome La Sapienza.

The research project (supervised by Prof. Francesco Marra) is based on the study, design, and characterization of metal coatings for adverse environments, using a liquid-phase chemical deposition technique called electroless metal plating.