

Simone Montano is a researcher of the Department of Earth and Environmental Sciences (DISAT), University of Milan –Bicocca and vice-director of MarHE center (Marine Research and High Education Center), Magoodhoo Island, Maldives. He teaches “Biodiversity and Marine Ecology” in the international master course in Marine Sciences. As coral reef ecologist currently, he is working on the ecology and biology of the coral reef system, with particular attention to the coral health and diseases assessment. Furthermore, his research is focusing on new emerging symbioses involving the dominant animal of tropical reefs, and in developing several mitigation tools for habitat restoration. To date he published > 90 peer reviewed papers in scientific international journals (H-index 22; i10-index 51; source Google Scholar 07/07/2022). He is PADI diving Instructor with an Advanced European Scientific Diver licence, > 700 scientific dives and a total of > 800. Main field work experiences include the Caribbean (St. Eustatius, Bonaire, and Curacao), the Indo-Pacific area (Maldives, Mauritius, Yemen, India, Thailand) and Red Sea (Egypt, Saudi Arabia).